PRISON SHIP MARTYRS MONUMENT UNVEILED

prised four divisions—troops attached to Division Headquarters, First and Second Brigade headquarters and the naval militia. In these were included two squadrons of cavalry, three batteries of field artillery, two organizations of the state signal corps, one field hospital corps, three coast artillery regiments, headed by General David E. Austin; the 7th, 12th, 14th, 23rd, 61st and 72nd Infantry regiments of the national guard; fourth division of the G. A. R., veterans associations and patriotic societies, squadrons of mounted police and many military and other bands.

The vicissitudes of the remains of the sailors and soldiers who died of fever and starvation, and rotted in the foul bulks of the British prison ships long anchored in Wallabout Bay, which they polluted, have been many, and have caused more than one outbreak of public indignation. It was in 1872, at a Brooklyn town meeting, that definite steps were first urged to properly bury the remains. Nothing was done, however, until 1898, when the Tammany Society secured funds for a temporary wooden tomb, which was constructed on Hudson Street. To this the bodies, dug from the trenches along the Wallabout banks where they had been hastily interred, were removed.

Children Played With Bones. With passing years the structure fell into decay, the bones became exposed and children played with them. Public feeling became aroused, and in 1875 the City of Brooklyn removed all that could be collected, several loads of them, to a tomb at Fort Greene Park under the stairs of the entrance, where they had been until work had begun on the present handsome memorial which the late Stanford White designed, and which represents about $200,000. To these bones were added, four years ago, after a public service at Plymouth Church, many more filling about eight coffins, which had been unearthed in construction of warehouses at the Brooklyn Navy Yard. All the remains are now encased in metallic confines in the spacious tomb which is approached by a stately flight of several hundred steps.

The experience of the prison ship "martyrs" constitute one of the most frightful chapters in American history. Eleven thousand sailors and soldiers died in the "Jersey" alone, a ship constructed to accommodate only 400 men, into which more than a thousand prisoners were usually crammed. Many were kept there for years. A survivor, Captain Thomas Dring, vividly depicted the scenes of the horrible incarceration:—"Registered and sent below newcomers suffered terribly from the intolerable heat and foul air, and when they sought the narrow air-holes they found them blocked by others who fought with all their strength for even the faintest breath of the precious air."

"Utter derangement was a common symptom of the fever that caused many deaths on board, and to increase the horror of the darkness that enshrouded us, for we were allowed no light betwixt decks, the voice of warning would be heard: 'Take heed to yourselves; there is a madman stalking through the ship with a knife in his hand.' I sometimes found the man a corpse in the morning by whose side I laid myself down at night."

"Of the bread furnished the prisoners the Rev. Thomas Andrea wrote in his account: 'I do not recollect seeing any which was not full of living vermin, but eat it, worms and all, we must or starve.'"

The condition of the great copper in which the prisoners meat was boiled is thus described in the memoirs of Ebenezer Fox, also a prisoner aboard the Jersey: "The inside of the copper became corroded to such a degree that it was lined with a coat of verdigris. The Jersey, from her size and lying near the shore, was imbedded in the mud; and I do not recollect seeing her astern during the whole time I was a prisoner. All the filth which accumulated among upwards of a thousand men was thrown overboard and would remain there until carried away by the tide. The impurity of the water may be easily conceived, and in this water our meat was boiled. Not less revolting than these scenes of cruelty and distress was the manner in which the inanimate bodies of these martyred prisoners were hastily and indecorously consigned to the earth. In some cases almost before they had become cold."

The program prepared for the day to begin at 3 p. m. included: Music by Twenty-third Regiment band, T. F. Shannon, leader, closing with the "Star Spangled Banner," all standing.
Prayer, the Rev. Dr. S. Parker Cadman.
Poem, Thomas Walsh.
Oration, Hon. William H. Taft.

Fortune Left to Dog. A woman named Estigodios, who committed suicide at her flat in Paris bequeathed her whole fortune to a pet terrier. She left a letter giving full details as to the dog's habits and favorite dishes.

In "Bohemia."
Some strange and unaccountable things are done in the name of "Bohemia," said the Bohemian. "The other night at a club the engagement was announced of an artist and a writer who is a widow. At the same time a new book by the writer was exploited at the club. The book was lovingly dedicated to her dearly beloved, much-mourned and never-to-be-forgotten departed and illustrated by the artist husband that is to be."

The Plagues of Egypt.
The plagues which, according to the Bible, were brought upon Egypt for the king's obstinate refusal to let the Israelites go into the wilderness to celebrate a festival were: (1) The turning of the river into blood, (2) frogs, (3) lice, (4) flies, (5) murrain, (6) boils, (7) hail, (8) locusts, (9) darkness, (10) the slaying of the first-born.
